CALL FOR PROPOSALS

Proposals are now being accepted for the 2023 ASDP National Conference, which will be held in-person in Kansas City, Missouri. Proposals addressing some aspect of this year's theme are encouraged, but we welcome any that advance research, teaching, and scholarship in Asian studies. Early submissions greatly facilitate assembling meaningful panels and sessions, and all proposals must be submitted by February 1, 2023. Proposals for individual papers, panels, poster sessions, or round-table sessions should not exceed 250 words.

Resilient Futures: Using Asian Studies to Envision a More Humanely Shared World

The ever-evolving challenges of the COVID-19 pandemic, climate disruption, economic inequality, identity conflicts, post-truth media, and political turmoil are opportunities for creative and collaborative thinking that draws equally on historical understanding and contemporary conceptual and technological resources to question narratives and envision more resilient communities and more humane systems of global interdependence.

The conference theme of Resilient Futures invites appreciative and critical reflection on the complexity of Asian perspectives and responses to current challenges, and how they open prospects for imagining global futures that are ecologically, economically, and culturally resilient—and also more humanely shared. How can philosophy, history, literature and the arts, natural and social sciences, and the societal formations of East, Southeast, and South Asian Studies contribute to a “planetary realism” that both sustainably and more inclusively advances visions of an ecologically and ethically responsible humanity?
