

Roots of Responsibility

ERC advanced grant project

Special Invited Lectures #s 7 & 8

Sunday, 30 October 2022

Gideon Schreier Lecture Theatre

Room 124, Bentham House, UCL

Sartre claims that there is no inertia in consciousness. Like many of his claims, this seems patently false. However, also like many of his claims, it can be interpreted in way in which it is both true and illuminating. I will provide such an interpretation and argue that, so understood, the claim is true.

Pamela Hieronymi (UCLA) No Inertia in Consciousness

Anton Ford (Chicago)

The Question ‘What to Do?’

One faces the question “What to do?” at every contiguous moment of waking life. The question is settled, or so I argue, not by one’s merely forming an intention, but rather by one’s doing something. I argue, further, that it is in virtue of one’s confrontation with the question “What to do?” that one is ready to answer the reason-requesting sense of the question “Why?” that applies to intention and intentional action.

One-day in-person event comprising two invited lectures, responses, general Q&A, and discussion. All welcome, but registration essential.

For More information, see: <https://bit.ly/PHAF-post>

European Research Council
Established by the European Commission

