

Call for Papers: AI and Future Creativity Politics - Expanded Edition

Art Style Magazine, an online, peer-reviewed publication dedicated to art and culture, invites submissions of extended essays and scholarly articles.

Art Style Magazine invites submissions for its expanded edition on AI and Future Creativity Politics. We are seeking critical and interdisciplinary articles that examine the dynamic relationship between art, technology, and society, with a special emphasis on how artificial intelligence (AI) is transforming artistic creation and cultural expression. As AI continues to reshape creative processes, aesthetic theories, and public engagement with art, we welcome contributions from diverse fields, including art history, aesthetics, digital humanities, communication science, design, architecture, music, sound studies, and image science. Join us in exploring the profound implications of AI on the future of art and cultural innovation. We encourage submissions that investigate how AI influences artistic agency, challenges traditional notions of authorship, and redefines the interaction between artist, observer, and environment. How does AI function as both a tool and a collaborator in creative processes? In what ways does it disrupt or enhance cultural production, accessibility, and artistic innovation? What ethical, philosophical, and societal questions arise from the intersection of AI and art?

Submissions should align with the magazine's aims and scope, offering fresh perspectives on the role of art in shaping contemporary society. Possible topics include, but are not limited to:

- AI-generated art and the redefinition of creativity
- The ethical implications of machine-made aesthetics
- AI and the politics of artistic production
- The intersection of digital culture, algorithmic art, and cultural identity
- The role of AI in preserving, curating, and transforming art history
- New methodologies for analyzing AI-driven artistic expression
- Urban aesthetics and AI's influence on public art and design

Art Style Magazine remains committed to fostering critical dialogue on social inclusion, sustainability, and decoloniality in artistic discourse. We welcome your contributions that examine the reciprocal influence between art, AI, and culture in an era of rapid technological evolution.
