

LUND MEDICAL ETHICS CONFERENCE 2022

May 30	Room: C121, LUX	Room: B251, LUX
09:00 – 09:15	Welcome and organisational details
09:15 – 09:40	Göran Hermerén (Lund University), The identity and future(s) of medical ethics
09:45 – 10:10	Tuija Takala (University of Helsinki), The Covid pandemic and the elderly
	coffee break
10:30 – 10:55	Ulrik Kihlbom (Uppsala University), The Covid pandemic and the children	Gert Helgesson (Karolinska Institutet), Misuse of co-authorship in medical PhD theses in Scandinavia: a questionnaire survey
11:00 – 11:25	Martina Gustavsson (Karolinska Institutet), Moral stress was common among 16 044 Swedish health care workers during the COVID-19 pandemic: a cross sectional study	Thomas Hartvigsson (University of Gothenburg), Mental and causal capacity: how to understand the metaphysics of mental capacity
11:30 – 11:55	Lukas Meier (Cambridge University), The ethics of COVID-19 triage	Michele Farisco (Uppsala University), A distributed responsibility model for implementing regulation on disorders of consciousness
	lunch break
13:00 – 13:25	Helene Bodegård (Karolinska Institutet), Towards understanding shared decision-making in patient-doctor consultations – an empirical approach	Kalle Grill (Umeå University), In defense of newborn genetic screening
13:30 – 13:55	Leila El-Alti (University of Gothenburg), The predicament of person-centredness in Swedish forensic psychiatry	Natalie Martin (University of Toronto), Challenges of the regulation of sperm donation in Canada
14:00 – 14:25	Kristina Hug (Lund University), How proven is “proven intervention”? Challenges to ethical justification of placebo controls in light of the global move towards “conditional approval” programs	Antoinette Lundahl (Karolinska Institutet), Self-harming patients with borderline personality disorder receive too long compulsory hospital admissions, with detrimental effects
	coffee break
14:45 – 15:10	Søren Holm (University of Oslo and University of Manchester), Is the authorship exploitation of biomedical doctoral students an unsolvable problem? A 10 year report from the frontline
15:15 – 15:40	Daan Kenis (University of Antwerp), Precision medicine, standpoint theory and epistemic injustice
15:45 – 16:10	Linus Broström and Anna Nilsson (Lund University), Non-discriminatory thresholds for informed consent to research participation

LUND MEDICAL ETHICS CONFERENCE 2022

May 31	Room: C121, LUX
09:00 – 09:25	Mette Hartlev (University of Copenhagen), How do big data and AI research projects challenge the current research ethics and regulatory framework?
09:30 – 09:55	Emily Lemmon (University of Iowa), Uncertainty and ethics of AI in surgery
10:00 – 10:25	Peter Zuk (Harvard Medical School), Neural data: not for sale
	coffee break
10:45 – 11:10	Jamie Webb (University of Edinburgh), Machine learning, healthcare resource allocation, and consent
11:15 – 11:40	Manne Sjöstrand (Karolinska Institutet), The ethics of suicide risk assessment
11:45 – 12:10	Joar Björk (Karolinska Institutet), Different faces of autonomy in palliative care
	lunch break
13:15 – 13:40	Niklas Juth (Uppsala University and Karolinska Institutet), Notions of severity in just health care priority setting
13:45 – 14:10	Ji-Young Lee (University of Copenhagen), Assisted reproduction as a case of social enhancement
14:10 – 14:20	Closing words